Service was quick, the mechanic is always informative when they call with an update, and all the problems I was experiencing were addressed. They're also good about recommending service needed.

Air & Cabin Air Filter Special

Your cabin air filter is vital in keeping the air in your vehicle fresh. But when it inevitably becomes gunked up with dirt, debris, and other contaminants, the air in your car might not feel or smell so fresh. And a musty smell inside your car isn't the only potential problem that may arise from an old cabin air filter. There are a couple of crucial reasons you need to make a cabin air filter replacement one of your top car-care maintenance priorities! Here's what happens if your cabin air filter is dirty and what you should do about it.

Why A Cabin Air Filter Is Important

Paying attention to what's going on inside the cabin is essential. Is the heater working well? How about the A/C? Is the driving experience comfortable or a little smelly and stuffy?

If you're dealing with the smelly and stuffy scenario, it's time to check your vehicle's cabin air filter. The cabin air filter is somewhat of an unsung hero in the automobile world. It juggles a lot of responsibilities, including:

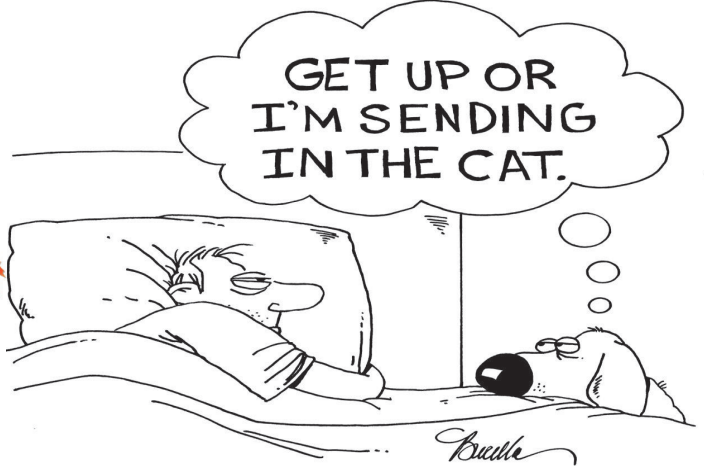

- Helping clear the air inside the cabin of bacteria, dust, and other pollutants.
- Helping eliminate odors within the vehicle's HVAC system.

Fall Hikes Near Portland

Banks-Vernonia State Trail

A century ago, a mighty railroad curved over the hills northwest of Portland, hugging ravines and cutting across creeks. Today, 21 miles (34 m) of the dismantled railroads have been transformed into the scenic, multi-use Banks-Vernonia Trail. Six trailheads give hikers (and cyclists, joggers, and horseback riders) plenty of opportunities to customize their route. Each path is lined with deciduous trees (think cottonwood, Oregon ash, red alder, big-leaf maple, and sour cherry) that display some of the most splendid fall hues in the region.

Punchbowl Falls and Metlako Falls

A 45-minute drive east of downtown Portland delivers hikers to the popular Eagle Creek Trail in the Columbia River Gorge. Autumn is a prime time to visit — not only to avoid the crowds but also to spot Chinook and coho salmon spawning near the mouth of the creek. From the trail's lower junction, follow the path about 2 miles (3.2 km) to one of Oregon's most iconic sites, Punchbowl Falls, named for the deep bowl-shaped basin at the waterfall's base. On the way back, keep an eye out for a sign pointing to lesser-known Metlako Falls. This showstopper's 100-foot (30 m) plume seems to shoot straight out of a cliffside before plunging into the pool below. On your way home, detour slightly to the Hood River Fruit Loop, a scenic drive that connects several family-owned farms offering apples, chestnuts, and cider.

Warrior Point

Sauvie Island has so much to offer, including beaches, farms, wildlife areas, and trails that seem to go on forever. Every autumn, folks flock to the island to harvest pumpkins, take hayrides and wander through corn mazes at several local patches. Once you've had your fill of U-pick apples and fresh cider, visit Warrior Point Trailhead at the island's northern tip. The mostly flat path winds its way along the Columbia River and through the Sauvie Island Wildlife Area. In the fall, you'll see migrating sandhill cranes, snow geese, tundra swans, and Canada geese. After 3 miles (5 km), trekkers will arrive at the 16-foot (5 m) Warrior Rock Lighthouse, Oregon's smallest lighthouse.
